This is Alex. She was one of the victims of the elusive Criminal X. After weeks of therapy, she has been deemed ready to answer questions about her experience. It is your job, as a member of a special government task force, to obtain as much information as you can about Criminal X.

You have a list of triggers that Criminal X installed in Alex and a brief file about her therapy. What do you do?

Trigger Alex

Ask Alex about Criminal X

Ask Alex about therapy

"You've got to be kidding!" Alex laughs. "What did you think the therapy was for? The nice doctor removed all of the triggers that the horrible criminal made me respond to."

Oops

"What kind of government official are you anyway? Or are you working with Criminal X? Either way I am going to report you." Without another word Alex leaves the room and storms off. Your superiors will not be happy about this.

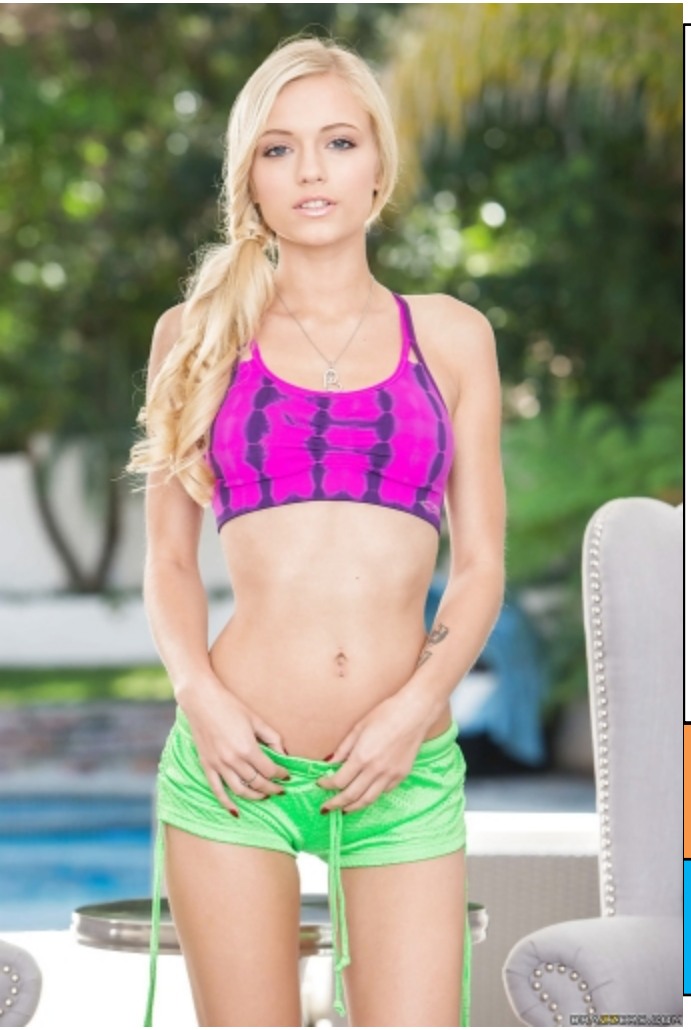
Try Again

"I just…I can't remember anything about him. I know that I talked to him and the therapy helped me to remember some of what happened. But I just do not remember what he looks like or anything about him. I'm so sorry!"

You realize that you will need to modify your approach in order to get the information you need. Instead you ask Alex:

Where she was with Criminal X

About her therapy progress.



Alex begins to think for a moment and closes her eyes. “I remember this much clearly. I was standing in a house. Maybe it was his. It had lavish furniture and large windows facing the backyard.”

You ask Alex what else she can remember.

“I was wearing a sports bra and shorts. I think I met him while on a run through the park. I vaguely recall someone stopping me and asking for help. He had lots of papers and needed me to hold them while he tied his shoe. He handed me the papers and then started talking quickly. I don’t really remember what he said. The next thing I knew, I was in the house.

You write down Alex’s responses, though everything that she said was already in her case file. You needed a way to break into the more important information. What do you do?

Ask Alex if you can hypnotize her to get to the information you need.

Ask Alex to act out what she remembers. Explaining to her that this could jog her memory.

Alex looks at you angrily. “Really? After everything that I have been through you think that I will be ok with someone hypnotizing me again?! The last time that happened I ended up here!”

You try to take back the suggestion but Alex grows more furious. “I don’t think I can do this anymore. You don’t seem to care at all about my safety or what I have been through. I am leaving”

Alex leaves you alone to ponder what could have gone differently.

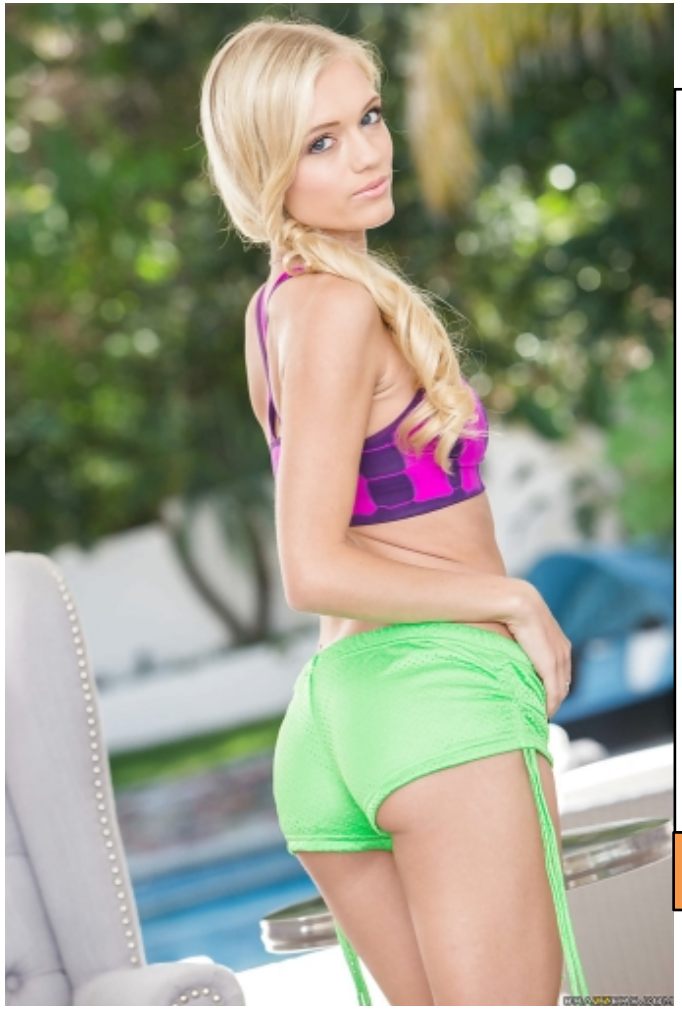
Try Again

Alex looks uncertain until you assure her that she is in good hands. “Ok, I guess,” she says as she stands from her chair. You ask if she can remember what is felt like to be very relaxed. “Yes relaxed.” You ask if she remembers feeling obedient. “Yes Obedient.” And you ask if she remembers her mind going blank. “Yes…blank.”

Alex blinks her eyes. You ask what Criminal X had her do next. As she remembers how she felt, Alex begins to remove her clothes, a blank stare on her face. In this state she seems to remember more events, and she seems to think that you are Criminal X in this scenario. What do you do?

Ask her to tell you what other acts Criminal X made her do.

Remind her that Criminal X made her have sex with him.



Alex blinks and continues to stare blankly. As if trying to call the event that you described to her mind. Soon she begins to blink more frequently and her eyes start to shift around.

“I remember a brief moment when I woke up.” Uh oh, if Alex woke up with Criminal X, she would be waking up for you soon. And you aren’t sure you have the skill that the criminal does for putting her back under again.

Why had your suggestion failed? You think back to the case file and then you realize. Criminal X did not have sex with any of his victims as far as anyone could tell. He probably knew that we could get his DNA if he had.

“Wha…what happened?” Alex began to look around. You quickly call in an assistant to remove the patient. You explain that she grew too confused to talk to and likely needed more therapy before she is questioned farther. That was close.

Try again

Alex recalls several actions that criminal X made her do. But without reenacting them, they are only coming in as small moments. Select the action that you want to get more information on by suggesting Alex reenact the scene.

When asked to reenact this moment, Alex removes her bra and presents her breasts to you. A pretty plain command in your opinion, but you aren't sure you can really blame Criminal X for this suggestion.

What do you do with this new suggestion?

Ask Alex to remember a different scenario.

Play with Alex's breasts.

You turn your attention to Alex's bare chest and enjoy yourself for…well, a bit longer than you should. Soon your supervisor comes in to see how things are going and fires you on the spot for your actions.

Try again.

Upon recalling this scenario, Alex shows you her ass. You start to realize that not all of these scenarios are relevant to the identification of Criminal X.

But…best to check them all out anyway right? I mean you never know.

Ask Alex to remember a different scenario.

When recalling this suggestion, Alex begins to act like a college cheerleader. “Like oh my god, I cannot wait for the cheer offs next week.” So maybe Criminal X has a thing for cheerleaders? But Alex’s file doesn’t show her going to college. You ask Alex where she cheers. “I go to State University. We have like, the largest cheer squad in the country.”

Largest cheer squad? You wonder why Alex knows that. “Like after the cheer offs, I should so bring the squad to Xavier’s place to celebrate.” Xavier? X!

You begin to piece everything together. Criminal X programmed Alex to infiltrate a large college cheer squad and bring them to him. The only question was, did your team catch Alex before she carried through her duty?

Good job. You have gotten more information. Play again?

When you tell her to remember this action, Alex removes all of her clothes and spreads her legs, presenting her pussy in an erotic fashion. She doesn't say a word and stares blankly ahead of her.

Well, no new information to be gained here.

Ask Alex to remember a different scenario.

"I love going to therapy!" Alex gushes. "At first when I learned what had happened to me, I was not very willing to trust anyone. Especially guys. So they assigned me to Dr. Malory. I was uncertain about her at first, but after she spoke to me for a couple of minutes I began to feel more comfortable."

You knew Dr. Malory well. She was the team's behavior modifications expert, hired to combat the damage done by Criminal X. You trusted her, but you also knew that a few minutes was way less time than it should have taken for Alex to warm up to her.

You begin to wonder what else happened in the therapy sessions and ask Alex what other details she can recall. "Umm…Not much actually. I know that she was helping to get rid of what Criminal X did to me, and I know that she made me very happy when she did so." Maybe it is time to get more specific. What do you ask next?

Ask Alex if Dr. Malory abused her or made her perform sexual acts during therapy.

Ask Alex what Dr. Malory said to her that helped to calm her down.

"No!" Alex exclaims, a little too quickly. "That's ridiculous! Dr. Malory would never do that to me.

You press farther, explaining that the doctor could have made her forget certain actions and that she should focus on odd or out of place things that she found herself doing during the sessions.

Alex continues to deny your claims for a moment before becoming quiet. She stares directly ahead as if lost in thought. She seems to be remembering a certain moment in time.

"Dr. Malory can do no wrong." She says in a monotone voice. She reaches for her phone and appears to send a message. You try to snap her out of it, but she seems too far gone.

Unsure of what to do next, you decide to bring in your superiors to help with this problem. Only at that moment you hear a knock on the door. You open the door, surprised to see Dr. Malory standing there. "Thanks for the text doll." She says to Alex. "Now down to business."

Everything goes blank.

You open your eyes and find yourself in a house that you do not recognize. In front of you stands Dr. Malory and Alex. Both topless. “Glad that you could join us.” Dr. Malory smiles. “Sorry dear I just couldn’t let you get any closer to learning about the side benefits that I get from this job. Criminal X sure does have nice taste in women. And they are already so obedient when they come to me. Isn’t that right Alex?”

“Yes Misteress.”

“Good girl” Dr. Malory turns her attention to you as you try to think of a way to escape. “No need to struggle dear. Just sit back and OBEY.” You feel yourself relax and find that you want to do whatever the doctor says.

Try again

Alex continues to try to recall the events of her therapy. “They were just random sentences I think. At the time I thought it was some psychological test like when they show you the ink blots. Actually, I think she was reading off a paper like the one you have in your hand.” Alex points to the list of triggers that Criminal X installed.

So Dr. Malory was talking advantage of her patients. You wonder if she even got rid of the installed triggers. You ask Alex if she ever saw Dr. Malory reading from that paper in other sessions. “No, just the first. In later sessions she started by reciting my favorite children’s song. She said it would calm me down to think about floating on the water.”

You suspect that you may know the song. But what if it only works when Dr. Malory says it? You could also try to turn in the doctor for her actions, but who knows how far her influence reaches? What do you do?

Send Alex with another agent who will keep her safe while you build a case against Dr. Malory

Recite Row, Row, Row Your Boat

You go to visit Alex at the safe house, guarded by another agent from your team. You have been helping Alex to take the stand against the doctor. At first it was difficult to break down her training, but eventually you made progress. You enter the house and are surprised to find it is empty. Looks like the doctor got to your witness before you had a chance to testify. Now you have nothing going forward.

Try Again

You recite the song and notice Alex's eyes go blank as she stares expressionlessly in front of her. "I am in a dream doctor." She says blankly. You ask Alex to recount the details of what she went through last time she had therapy.

"Yes doctor. I stripped naked as I usually do at the start of our sessions. Then you began to install commands and triggers into my open and obedient mind. I loved every minute of the pleasure from your suggestions."

You ask Alex what current triggers are installed in her mind.

"I have three. Down the Stream, Merrily, and Row" Great more triggers from the song. You suppose that the best way to figure out what they are is to try them out.

Say Down the Stream

Say Merrily

Say Row

You use the trigger Down the Stream. Alex recalls when the doctor used this trigger on her and repeats her actions from that day. She lays on a nearby table and presents her crotch and ass to you.

“Yes Doctor. Here is my pussy if you wish to be down stream.” She lays her head down on the table and continues. “If you wish for me to be down stream, your doll is ready.”

You realize this trigger is meant to inspire oral sex. Somehow you think that this may not be the best idea given the circumstances. Best to continue testing triggers.

What trigger do you use next?

Say Merrily

Say Row

You use the trigger Merrily. Alex blinks her eyes and smiles at you. For a moment you think she is awake and become nervous. Then she speaks. “I am your sexy girlfriend doctor. I want to make you happy in whatever way possible.” Ok, so Dr. Malory could trigger Alex to be her girlfriend. You wonder how many times the doctor used this in the weeks of therapy to get Alex to return home with her. Well, still nothing here. Better keep triggering.

What trigger do you use next?

Say Down the Stream

Say Row

You use the trigger Row. Alex's expression remains blank. "Yes Doctor. You now have complete access to my mind. All thoughts, emotions, actions, and memories are now yours to control."

This must be how Dr. Malory installed new triggers and made sure that Alex acted normally when awake. You consider trying out some of the other triggers. But then you think about the last thing Alex said. You now had access to her memories. Was it possible that you could gain information about Criminal X in this way?

What do you decide to do?

Say Down the Stream

Say Merrily

Ask for more information about Criminal X

Alex begins to describe an event in her memory about her time with Criminal X. It seems that even with the doctor's training, she is still unable to remember much about the man herself. But she remembers one lasting suggestion.

"He turned me into a college cheerleader. He instructed me to try out for a cheer squad at State University because their squad is so big. After one of our cheer competitions I was supposed to bring the squad to his place.

You wonder what Criminal X had planned for these girls. And you wonder if Alex had already carried out the command or if you had stopped her in time.

Well, for now your job is over. Better wake Alex up and try to return her to normal.

Good job. You have gotten more information. Play again?